Types of Eating Disorder Worksheets

Eating disorder worksheets come in various formats, each designed to address specific aspects of eating disorders. Here are some common types:

1. Daily Food and Mood Logs

These worksheets help individuals track their food intake alongside their moods and feelings. By identifying patterns between emotions and eating behaviors, individuals can gain insights into triggers and emotional eating.

2. Thought Record Worksheets

Thought record worksheets allow individuals to document negative thoughts related to body image, food, and self-worth. This practice helps challenge harmful beliefs and promotes cognitive restructuring.

3. Meal Planning Worksheets

Meal planning worksheets assist in creating balanced meal plans that consider nutritional needs and personal preferences. These worksheets encourage mindful eating and help individuals regain a healthy relationship with food.

4. Exposure Worksheets

For those dealing with fear foods or anxiety around eating, exposure worksheets systematically outline steps to confront these fears. This gradual exposure helps desensitize individuals to the anxiety associated with certain foods.

5. Relapse Prevention Worksheets

These worksheets focus on identifying high-risk situations that may lead to relapse. By developing a personalized relapse prevention plan, individuals can build resilience and strategies to maintain their recovery.
