What is the OSHA 10-hour training program?

The OSHA 10-hour training program is designed to provide entry-level workers with knowledge about workplace safety and health hazards. This course offers two versions: one for general industry and another for the construction industry. The primary goal is to help workers recognize, avoid, and prevent hazards on the job. The training covers various topics, including fall protection, electrical safety, and personal protective equipment (PPE).

Participants who complete the training receive an OSHA 10 card, indicating they have completed the necessary coursework. This card is often required by employers in certain industries to ensure that employees have a foundational understanding of safety practices. The course typically consists of interactive lessons, quizzes, and discussions to engage learners and reinforce essential safety concepts.
