Overview of Fast & Furious: Tokyo Drift

"Fast & Furious: Tokyo Drift" is the third installment of the Fast & Furious franchise, released in 2006. Directed by Justin Lin, the film introduced audiences to a new protagonist, Sean Boswell, played by Lucas Black. Unlike its predecessors, this film diverged from the street racing scene in the United States and instead plunged into the underground drift racing culture of Tokyo.

The storyline follows Sean as he moves to Japan to escape trouble at home, only to find himself embroiled in the high-stakes world of drift racing. The film is notable for its impressive action sequences, showcasing a variety of Japanese cars and racing techniques. It features iconic vehicles such as the Nissan Skyline GT-R and the Mazda RX-7, which have since become symbols of the drift racing community.
