

fbi most wanted list 2013

fbi most wanted list 2013 is a significant part of American law enforcement history, showcasing the most dangerous criminals sought by the FBI during that year. The FBI's Most Wanted List serves to inform the public about fugitives who are believed to pose a serious threat to society and are evading capture. This article delves into the details of the FBI Most Wanted List from 2013, exploring the notorious individuals featured on the list, the criteria for inclusion, and the impact of the list on criminal apprehension. Additionally, we will discuss how the list has evolved over time and its relevance in contemporary law enforcement.

- Introduction to the FBI Most Wanted List
- Notable Criminals from the 2013 List
- Criteria for Inclusion on the Most Wanted List
- The Role of the Public in Apprehending Fugitives
- Evolution of the FBI Most Wanted List
- Impact of the Most Wanted List on Crime and Law Enforcement
- Conclusion

Introduction to the FBI Most Wanted List

The FBI's Most Wanted List was established to highlight individuals who are considered extremely dangerous and are actively evading law enforcement. In 2013, the list included several high-profile fugitives, each with their own sordid stories of crime and evasion. The list not only serves as a warning to the public but also as a call to action for individuals to assist in bringing these criminals to justice. The inclusion of a criminal on this list often leads to increased media attention and public awareness, which can significantly aid in their capture. This section will provide an overview of the list's purpose and significance within the law enforcement community.

Notable Criminals from the 2013 List

In 2013, the FBI's Most Wanted List featured several notorious criminals, some of whom had committed heinous acts of violence or other serious crimes. This section will detail a few of the most notable individuals from that year.

1. James "Whitey" Bulger

James Bulger was a notorious mobster who led the Winter Hill Gang in Boston. He was wanted for 19 murders and various other crimes. Bulger evaded capture for 16 years, becoming one of the FBI's most wanted fugitives. His eventual capture in June 2011 marked a significant victory for law enforcement.

2. Eric Justin Toth