Understanding Four Blood Moons

In "Four Blood Moons," John Hagee presents a theory that connects a series of lunar eclipses, known as tetrads, to significant events in Jewish history. Hagee argues that these blood moons are not mere astronomical occurrences but divine signs that coincide with pivotal moments in the life of Israel and the Jewish people. The book delineates the four specific blood moons that occurred in 2014 and 2015, which coincided with Jewish holidays such as Passover and Sukkot.

The Tetrad Explained

A tetrad consists of four consecutive total lunar eclipses, each separated by six months. Hagee highlights that the four blood moons he discusses all fell on Jewish feast days, which he believes is a sign of God's providence and a warning for the world regarding Israel's fate. The specific dates of these eclipses are:

- April 15, 2014 (Passover)
- October 8, 2014 (Sukkot)
- April 4, 2015 (Passover)
- September 28, 2015 (Sukkot)

Hagee posits that the alignment of these celestial events with significant Jewish holidays is a clear indication of divine intervention and a precursor to major historical events affecting Israel.

The Theological Significance

In his exploration of the blood moons, Hagee draws heavily from biblical prophecy, particularly passages from the Book of Joel and the Book of Revelation. He interprets these scriptures as forecasting a divine message through astronomical phenomena, particularly pertaining to Israel. Hagee's interpretation resonates with many believers who see the hand of God in the timing of these events.

Biblical Foundations

Hagee references several key verses to support his claims, including:

- Joel 2:31: "The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come."
