Fred and Rose West House of Horrors: A chilling tale of crime and depravity, the story of Fred and Rose West has become one of the most infamous narratives in British criminal history. Their home at 25 Cromwell Street in Gloucester, England, served as the site of unimaginable horrors and is often referred to as the "House of Horrors." This article delves into the background of the Wests, the details of their heinous crimes, the investigation that followed, and the aftermath of their actions.

Background of Fred and Rose West

Fred West was born on September 29, 1941, in a rural area of Herefordshire, England. His childhood was marred by neglect and abuse, which played a significant role in shaping his later behavior. He was known for his erratic and violent tendencies from a young age. After several failed relationships and a troubled adolescence, Fred met Rose Letts, a young woman from a similarly troubled background. They married in 1972, forming a partnership that would become notorious for its brutality.

The Wests' Life in Gloucester

In the early years of their marriage, Fred and Rose West moved to Gloucester, where they rented a house at 25 Cromwell Street. The couple was known for their charm and friendliness, but beneath the surface lay a dark reality. They began taking in lodgers, which provided them with a steady income. However, it also opened the door for their sinister activities.
