Begin by reflecting on your interests and expertise. Consider what industries you are passionate about and where your skills lie. The intersection of passion and skill can often lead to a viable business idea. Evaluate how these elements can translate into a product or service that meets the needs of potential customers.

Assessing Market Viability

Once you have a preliminary idea, it's crucial to assess its viability. This involves understanding whether there is a demand for your product or service in the market. Analyze existing competitors and identify what they are doing well, as well as gaps you can exploit.
