primarily centers on the conflict between two powerful clans: the Taira and the Minamoto. This epic poem was traditionally recited by blind minstrel performers known as "biwa hōshi," who used the biwa, a traditional Japanese lute, to accompany their storytelling. The Heike Story is not merely a historical account; it is a complex tapestry woven with themes of fate, glory, and the fleeting nature of life. The narrative structure interlaces poetry with prose, creating a lyrical quality that enhances the emotional depth of the characters' experiences. The work is divided into 12 volumes, each detailing different events and characters, ultimately illustrating the tragic downfall of the Taira clan.
