Early Inhabitants

The history of Highlands NC begins long before European settlers arrived. The region was originally inhabited by the Cherokee Indians, who thrived in the area due to its abundant natural resources. The Cherokee were skilled hunters, gatherers, and farmers, utilizing the mountainous terrain to cultivate crops such as corn, beans, and squash.

The sacred lands of the Cherokee were filled with rich traditions and cultural practices. They held deep spiritual connections to the mountains, which they believed were inhabited by various deities. Their social structure was organized around clans, and they had a well-developed system of governance.

Archaeological evidence suggests that the Cherokee utilized the Highlands area for centuries. Artifacts such as pottery, tools, and stone carvings have been discovered, providing insight into the daily lives and rituals of the Cherokee people. Their presence laid the groundwork for the region's history, influencing later settlers and shaping the community's cultural identity.

European Settlement

The arrival of European settlers in the late 18th century marked a significant turning point in the history of Highlands NC. The first settlers were predominantly of Scottish and Irish descent, drawn to the area by its natural beauty and the promise of land. By the early 1800s, small farming communities began to form, and the landscape started to change dramatically.

Land grants from the North Carolina government encouraged settlers to move into the region, and many established homesteads in the fertile valleys. However, the encroachment of settlers led to conflicts with the Cherokee, who were gradually displaced from their ancestral lands.

Notable figures such as William and John McKee were among the early settlers who played crucial roles in developing the community. They contributed to building essential infrastructure, including roads and schools, which facilitated further settlement and economic growth.

Growth and Development of Highlands

As the 19th century progressed, Highlands continued to grow. The arrival of the railroad in the late 1800s transformed the town by providing easier access for visitors and goods. This transportation breakthrough not only connected Highlands to larger markets but also opened the door to tourism and commerce.

With an influx of visitors, local businesses began to flourish. Inns, hotels, and restaurants sprang up to accommodate the growing number of tourists seeking refuge in the cool mountain air during the summer months. The establishment of the Highlands Cashiers Chamber of Commerce in 1922 further solidified the area as a destination for visitors.

The town was officially incorporated in 1885, marking a significant milestone in its development. The incorporation allowed for better governance and planning, contributing to the preservation of its unique character amidst rapid growth.

Highlands as a Tourist Destination

Highlands NC has become synonymous with tourism, attracting visitors from all over the country and beyond. Its stunning natural scenery, including waterfalls, hiking trails, and panoramic mountain views, draws outdoor enthusiasts and nature lovers alike. The establishment of the Buck Creek and Whiteside Mountain areas as protected lands further enhances the region's appeal.

Throughout the 20th century, the growth of tourism led to the development of various cultural and recreational activities, including art festivals, music events, and culinary experiences. The town hosts the Highlands Food and Wine Festival, showcasing the area's culinary excellence and attracting foodies from afar.

Moreover, the arts scene in Highlands has flourished, with galleries and theaters offering a platform for local artists and performers. This cultural vibrancy adds depth to the town's charm, making it a favorite destination for those seeking both relaxation and enrichment.
