In the early days of Hollywood, high school was often depicted through a very simplistic lens. Films during the 1950s and 1960s, such as "Rebel Without a Cause" and "Grease," painted high school life as a battleground of teenage angst and rebellion against societal norms. The characters were usually archetypes: the jock, the nerd, the bad boy, and the popular girl.

- Romantic entanglements
- The search for identity

The Rise of the Teen Comedy: 1980s

The 1980s marked the emergence of the teen comedy genre, which introduced a more humorous and lighthearted take on high school life.
