Each segment focuses on a woman confronted with an unplanned pregnancy, showcasing their individual experiences and the societal pressures they face. The film utilizes a combination of drama and emotional storytelling to explore themes of choice, shame, and empowerment.

Segment One: The 1950s

The first segment introduces us to the character of Ellen (played by Demi Moore), a young woman whose life is drastically altered when she discovers she is pregnant. Set in the conservative climate of the 1950s, Ellen faces immense societal pressure to conform to traditional norms.

The second segment is set against the backdrop of the women's liberation movement and the landmark Supreme Court case Roe v. Wade. It follows the character of Barbara (played by Sissy Spacek), who finds herself in a more progressive yet still challenging environment.

- Key Themes in the 1970s Segment:

- Emergence of Choice: With the legalization of abortion, Barbara navigates her newfound autonomy, but faces internal and external conflicts regarding her decision.
- Support Networks: Unlike Ellen, Barbara has access to supportive friends and advocates for reproductive rights, reflecting the changing social landscape.
- Consequences of Choice: The segment also delves into the emotional aftermath of Barbara's decision, highlighting both empowerment and regret.

This chapter reveals the complexities of choice and the importance of support systems, showcasing the gradual changes occurring in society's views on women's rights.

Segment Three: The 1990s

The final segment jumps to the 1990s, focusing on the character of Claire (played by Anne Heche), a single mother who confronts the challenges of raising a child while considering another pregnancy.

- Key Themes in the 1990s Segment:
- Complicated Choices: Claire is torn between her love for her existing child and the fear of an unplanned pregnancy.
